

COLLEGE CAMPUS POP-UP PANTRY BASICS

WHO

Pop-up pantries are an accessible food resource for college students on campus and can be run by faculty, staff, student workers, or volunteers.

WHAT

A pop-up pantry can be a table-style event that offers students easy-to-grab snacks, produce, packed meals and other items as well as promotional materials for additional resources, such as an on-campus pantry.

WHEN

Pop-up pantries can be used during high-volume, high-traffic times, such as the first few weeks of a semester, mid-terms or finals week, as well as during on-campus events, such as health or career fairs.

WHERE

Pop-up pantries can be set up anywhere on campus, especially if there is not a physical pantry on site. Some locations could include spaces that are far from the on-campus pantry or any high-traffic areas.

WHY

Pop-up pantries are a great way to generate awareness about on-site pantries, campus distributions and other resources, such as SNAP benefits. Pop-ups are also a point of access to food for students on campus.
